

Sarah M was a perennial student and avid reader. When she moved out of the dorm, she had more boxes of books than anything else. She was always quick to recommend a book — and wanted you to report back to her once you finished the ones she had suggested.

She traveled extensively and always delighted in regaling us with stories about her adventures. It always seemed as if there was some fantastic/memorable event whenever she traveled, and she was a fantastic storyteller. I was always fascinated with her world adventures and loved listening to her talk about her trips with friends and strangers alike.

As a resident, she delighted in spending time telling MHS ghost stories with the 9th graders when they lived together on the 2nd floor — to my absolute dismay as it took weeks sometimes to calm them back down.

I had the pleasure of taking AP European History with her, and she amazed me with her notes and preparation for each class — much of which she never really had to reference during a lecture. She was like that in all of her classes, and her students benefited from all that brought with her into the classroom and in to the dorm.

She was one of the quirkiest people I have ever known — a true character. She will be fondly remembered and missed. — Sarah Virden, Director of Academic Counseling
